Notes professionnelles :

DESCRIPTION

We are beyond excited to confirm that The Oak Barrel's next exclusive bottling is a single cask, cask strength release from GlenDronach distillery. Well over a year in the planning we have selected a 12-year-old Oloroso cask, cask #3492 to be exact, that was filled January 24 2003. Split with New Zealand, It is the first single cask from GlenDronach to be bottled exclusively for the Antipodean region. The release sits alongside the Oak Barrel's previous exclusive bottlings from Glenfarclas, Sullivan's Cove, Overeem, Lark, Adelphi and New World Whisky Distillery.

Tasting notes from the distillery:

Nose: Golden sultanas and spiced poached pears dusted with Demerara and drizzled with stem ginger syrup.

Appearance: Antique gold.

Palate: Fresh crisp oak spices flood through stewed orchard fruits and apricot jam. Cracked barley, cinnamon and a gentle hint of clove oil round off the classic Highland character.

Tasting notes by Oak Barrel's Scott Fitzsimons and Archie Rose's Dave Withers:

Nose: Pudding, burnt toast, golden syrup, caramel, assorted Australian lollies.

Palate: Initially quite compact, it opens up to pudding, raisins and blackberry jam.

Finish: Dark chocolate, fragrant sawdust and young American oak.

Comment: This has a classic fruitcake GlenDronach nose, but the finish is quite unique and pronounced.

GlenDronach

The Glendronach distillery lies at the Dronach Burn in the Deveron area. The whisky distillery was founded in 1826, by a syndicate headed by James Allardes. Thanks to the fifth Duke of Gordon, distillation throughout the highlands was legalized in the early 19th century. It is said the duke encouraged the group to build Glendronach. The distillery changed hands in 1852, to Walter Scott of Teaninich. Following his death, a group from Leith acquired the distillery.

It was in 1920 that William Grant's son Charles Grant purchased Glendronach for £9,000. A few months later production began once more, the distillery having been silent for some time. During the 1960s, William Teacher and Sons acquired the distillery and subsequently installed two new stills. The distillery now has an annual capacity of 1.3 million litres. In 1976, Allied took over and in 1996 they mothballed the distillery. Production began again in 2002 and three years later, following the acquisition of Allied, Chivas Brothers became the new owner.

In 2005, the distillery was closed for a few months to allow for conversion from coal to steam to heat the stills. This change may well effect the character of the single malt whisky. When fire from coal directly heats the stills, the distribution of heat is somewhat uneven, creating hotspots. These hotspots proffer a richer, toffee-like Scotch whisky. Steam indirectly heats the stills, providing even distribution, without the caramel and toffee overtones. Long since associated with Teachers, Glendronach's whisky has been used in the blends since the late 1800s. Following the Chivas Brothers acquisition, it has been a constituent of Chivas Regal. The Glendronach distillery was purchased by BenRiach's owners in 2008 for £15 million. BenRiach remain the proprietors.
